

Tired, Nervous Mothers

Make Unhappy Homes—Their Condition Irritates Both Husband and Children—How Thousands of Mothers Have Been Saved From Nervous Prostration and Made Strong and Well.

A nervous, irritable mother, often on the verge of hysterics, is unfit to care for children; it ruins a child's disposition and reacts upon herself. The trouble between children and their mothers too often is due to the fact that the mother has some female weakness, and she is entirely unfit to bear the strain upon her nerves that governing children involves; it is impossible for her to do anything calmly.

The ills of women act like a firebrand upon the nerves, consequently nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous dependency, "the blues," sleeplessness, and nervous irritability of women arise from some derangement of the female organism.

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness, alternating with extreme irritability? Are your spirits easily affected, so that one minute you laugh, and the next minute you feel like crying?

Do you feel something like a ball rising in your throat and threatening to choke you? All the senses perverted, morbidly sensitive to light and sound; pain in the abdominal region, and between the shoulders; oozing-down pains; nervous dyspepsia and almost continually cross and snappy?

If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition, and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is monumental that nothing in the world is better for nervous prostration than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; thousands and thousands of women can testify to this fact.

APPLE CROP TO BE LIGHT

Reports of the Vermont Experiment Station

GOOD PRICES LOOKED FOR

Throughout the Country Nothing More Than a Medium Crop Is Promised—But Reports Are Conflicting.

Lurlington, Sept. 26.—Many conflicting reports as to the 1906 apple crop have appeared in various horticultural and farm journals throughout the country. This has led to uncertainty on the part of growers as to the facts. Most of the early reports indicated a rather heavy crop in the principal apple growing sections of the United States and Canada; later an unusually heavy June drop was reported from many sections; while still other information indicated somewhat severe losses in the Mississippi valley region from the bitter rot fungus. The actual extent of these losses throughout the country cannot be definitely stated, but that the size of crop has been very materially curtailed cannot be gainsaid. Reports received within the past few weeks from widely separated fruit growing sections indicate a great reduction as compared with predictions made earlier in the season. The general situation seems to be that the crop is irregular and scattering, good in some orchards, poor in others, heavy in some localities, light in others. A careful review of the data at hand does not justify one in estimating the apple production for 1906 at more than a medium crop.

What is the situation as it relates to Vermont orchards? The Vermont Experiment Station, through extensive correspondence and personal visitation of apple orchards, has obtained fairly accurate information concerning the Vermont apple crop. In no instance were late fall and winter varieties reported as more than a medium crop; in many cases it was said to be a light one. It is doubtful if as a whole it equals the 1905 crop.

The Vermont grower is warranted in expecting good prices for No. 1 apples, approximately probably those received last year. He will ordinarily do well to hold such stock rather than to sacrifice on it.

Before You Go

When about to travel, if subject to headache, nervousness, dizziness, or car-sickness, take one or two doses of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills before starting. They will insure you against an attack.

There are a great many who are sure to have headache, whenever they go to church or places of amusement, or where there is any excitement or oppression. Take them with you, and on the first indication, take a tablet and see how quickly it will disappear. To such persons Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are a great blessing. They soothe the nerves and allay irritation and excitement.

"We always keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills in our home, and find them a remarkable remedy for the relief of headaches, nervousness, etc. Two tablets never fail to stop the most severe headache, but one is usually sufficient. CREAM SEPARATOR HONESTY.

Each and every manufacturer of a cream separator claims his machine to be "the best." This is good business, but it is hardly giving the buyer a square deal. There can be only one "best" machine, which really means that the others are trying to secure buyers under false pretenses. Fancy catalogues, big "claims," flashy "challenges" and liberal "free trial" offers are good advertising, but may all go hand-in-hand with the poorest and trashiest machine on the market. You may have thought of this without knowing just what to do about it. But if you are about to buy a machine why not look up the real facts—the proven facts about separators? Consult the experienced creamery and dairy operators, the agricultural experiment station records, the government records, the results of all important butter scoring contests, and the records of tests and awards made at all important expositions and agricultural shows. You will then know the truth about cream separators and can tell the manufacturer who has misrepresented matters to you to seek business elsewhere. If you have investigated well and carefully you will find that there is but one separator which will do all that is claimed for it and can honestly be called "the best." That machine is the DE LAVAL. Wherever tests have been made of different separators the DE LAVAL has always averaged best. Wherever records have been kept of the work of different separators, the DE LAVAL has always been first. Once again we say, look up the proven facts concerning separators and learn the truth for yourself. Will the other manufacturers give you the same advice? We think not. There is a very good reason why they will not do so. It would mean a business suicide for them. A DE LAVAL catalogue may be had for the asking. Write for it today.

Torrington Closes Its Store, Said to Be the Last of Its Kind.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 26.—The Torrington co-operative company, which opened one of the stores instituted throughout New England by the so-called sovereigns of industry in the period of inflation which followed some years after the close of the Civil war, has been forced to close its doors and divide its funds, because of losses said to have been caused through an absconding clerk. This marks the end of a mercantile experiment which was a success for years. The sovereigns were composed of farmers and mechanics, who banded together in trade to protect themselves from the ruinous prices prevailing at the time indicated. At one time 300 stores were successfully operated in New England. The general downfall of the scheme is said to have been brought about through too much prosperity. Patrons of the stores demanded finer goods than were offered for sale and became ashamed of their connection with the semi-socialist organization. The Torrington store is believed to have been the last in the business. At one time the store was worth $125, and its profits very large.

Because of the fact that there is no timber except at the shaft it is believed the fire will be quickly smothered.

The jury added to its verdict a rider that the curve at the Nottingham branch line be widened, and that the switch on the main line be set clear as soon as a train had passed.

The Times' Daily Short Story.

Domestic Difficulties

[Copyright, 1906, by W. R. Caldwell.]

"What's that?" exclaimed Mrs. Blair as a loud thud in the hall smote upon her ears.

"It's only the mail carrier throwing in one of my rejected stories, of course," replied her husband resignedly, springing up from the breakfast table and disappearing into the hall.

Presently he returned with a fat envelope, which he tossed beside his plate, and a magazine, which he proceeded to open and glance through.

"Which one is it this time?" asked his wife sympathetically.

"The mining story I sent off last Thursday."

"Only five days ago! I don't believe they even looked at it!"

"Oh, yes, they did. They probably saw at a glance that they didn't want it and were kind enough to ship it back promptly. Perhaps it was too long or too short or— Stay, let me see what the editor does say," tearing open the envelope and glancing over a printed slip.

"We have read the enclosed manuscript with interest and regret that it does not seem precisely adapted to our present needs and therefore return it. H'm, h'm! This does not imply any lack of merit. No, of course not. In fact, my dear, it's the same old story in the same old way."

He slammed the contemptuous manuscript upon the table and resumed his study of the magazine.

"Yet plenty of writers do get in," he continued. "Here are eight short stories in this number of Rampart, and thousands of others are published every month. It seems as if everybody wrote for the press nowadays."

"Even the lawyers," said his wife, with a glimmer of fun in her eyes.

"Well, even a lawyer doesn't disdain an occasional twenty or thirty dollars for a few hours' spare work."

"Twenty or thirty dollars! You are coming down rapidly in your prices. Last year it was forty or fifty, and the year before it was a hundred or so."

"The law of supply and demand, my dear. If I had made a hit like the author of Mr. Jiggs of the Oyster Bed, my prices would be advancing at a corresponding rate. But what I was going to say is this: How do all these writers get in and why in the mischief can't I get in too? Jerusalem!"

The explosive was addressed to the maid, who in setting a cup of coffee beside his place had splashed some of the hot contents over his hand and upon the tablecloth. He glared at her savagely while she awkwardly apologized and mopped up the fluid with a napkin.

Mrs. Blair frowned at him, as if to say, "Don't scold her!" and then observed kindly to the maid: "Never mind, Mary. The cloth would go in the wash tomorrow, anyway. Now, will you please set a finger bowl on the table?"

Mr. Blair returned to the magazine. "Here is another story by that new writer, M. Conway, and it seems to start off well. I wish I could meet him, or, more likely, her, for most of the new writers seem to be women. I'd say to him, or her: 'Sir, or madam, how in the world did you do it? How did you get in? Was it by influence or cheek or a personal acquaintance with the editor? Won't you kindly inform me how it was accomplished? Tell me how to get in and I'll promise to whisk up half of my first year's profits.'"

A loud crash interrupted his remarks, and, glancing up, he beheld the maid standing helplessly over the fragments of a cut glass finger bowl.

"Well, what next?" he began, but his wife hastily interposed. "Never mind, Mary. A little clean water won't hurt the rug, and you can sweep up the glass after breakfast."

When the maid had withdrawn Mrs. Blair said to her husband, "You must be careful not to speak so sharply or we'll lose her, and I don't know where we could get any one to take her place."

"All right," returned Mr. Blair. "But there's one thing I will insist upon. She must keep out of my door. She was in there again this morning."

"Yes, she asked my permission to look at your dictionary."

"The dictionary? Now, what?"

As if in answer to his unfinished question the maid entered, blushing, handed her mistress a note and quietly withdrew.

With a muttered exclamation of amazement Mrs. Blair glanced through the note and then read it aloud:

"Dear Madam—I regret to inform you that our pleasant connection as mistress and maid will terminate on the 15th inst., when my month is up. This does not imply any lack of kindness on your part, but simply that I am engaged in more remunerative and congenial employment. Trusting you may soon find another maid who will prove available. I am very respectfully yours,

"M. CONWAY PLANNERTY."

"Great Scott! M. Conway—our maid!" gasped Mr. Blair.

They gazed blankly at each other a moment and then roared with laughter.

Finally, "You'd better give it up, my dear," said his wife chokingly as she wiped her eyes.

"I will," he returned, reading his manuscript in twink. "When household take to story writing it is high time for lawyers to stick to their beliefs."

CHARLES LEE SLEIGHT.

MRS. HERMANN OELRICHS.

The Widow of the Noted Club Man Who Died Recently at Sea.

Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, who may contest the will of her late husband, the famous clubman and athlete, was Miss Theresa Alice Fair, daughter of the late Senator Fair of California, and she married Mr. Oelrichs about fifteen years ago. She is a sister of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Charles G. Fair, who, with his wife, was killed in an automobile accident in France some time ago, was her brother. Mr. Oelrichs was in the shipbuilding business and at the time of his marriage was supposed to enjoy an income of about $100,000 a year. His wife inherited some $600,000, and Mr. Oelrichs devoted a good deal of his time to the management of her estate. Of late years they had not spent much time together, Mrs. Oelrichs living in New York, Newport and Europe and Mr. Oelrichs being especially fond of the Pacific coast as a place of residence. He was in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake and went to New York afterward on a scrap of paper signed by E. H. Harriman. The Fairmont hotel, which was damaged in the fire following the earthquake, was built with Mrs. Oelrichs' money. Mr. Oelrichs made a will in 1902, leaving his wife his estate, but in 1904 made another giving it mostly to his brother, Charles May Oelrichs. It was said he did this because his wife did not need his estate and because his son, Hermann Oelrichs, Jr., was already provided for. However, it has been stated that Mrs. Oelrichs might contest the will in the interest of her son if she found that property was included in his father's estate which came from her fortune rather than from Mr. Oelrichs' own business enterprises.

Mrs. Oelrichs is a leader in society and noted for her interest in automobile and motor boating, and since the death of her brother in a motor car accident she has given much attention to the possibility of constructing a "safety auto."

Costume of Green Broadcloth.

brims and higher crowns than the summer sailor shapes.

Braid is to be a trimming much employed during the winter. A stunning suit of navy blue is trimmed with black and white braid.

Wings, stiff bows of ribbon and an occasional plume are the trimmings seen on the first importations of fall hats. In the dress line of hats there is very little shown as yet.

Brown and green are to be the leading colors of the winter. They appear either plain or in fascinating mixtures. One particularly smart effect is a plaid which remains hidden under the weave except in a strong light.

Skirts so far are either plaited or circular, some of them trimmed with circular ruffles, which give the cut-away effect so well liked in all the autumn fashions.

The costume seen in the cut is carried out in a delicious shade of gray green broadcloth. The circular skirt fastens a little toward one side with a row of cloth covered buttons. The smart fitted jacket is effectively trimmed with black velvet and a new white silk braid.
